GIRL BABY GOES FROM LUXURIES TO POVERTY

Adopted by Marquis of Anglesey and Being Reared Like a Princess, She Shared in Downfall of Erratic Noble.

LONDON, Sept. 3. THE baby girl who was adopted a year ago by the Marquis of Anglesey has been returned to her parents.

During the twelve months the baby sojourned at Anglesey Castle she enjoyed all the luxuries which wealth could command.

Every day she took her daily airing in a perfectly appointed carriage and pair and attended by a couple of nurses. Her parents are in poor circumstances.

A detailed inspection of the 300 lots of wearing apparel belonging to the Marquis of Anglesey which are to be distributed by auction at the seventh sale next week leaves the mind in a whirl of kaleidoscopic patterns and colors, and yet with a clearer view of the personality of the man who collected such gorgeous raiment. There is revealed a young man born in luxury and knowing not the value of money—one whose ill-health turned his bent from athletics to art, or at least to a keen appreciation of the artistic as applied to himself. His tastes and eccentricities seem to be the only adjectives applicable to a young man who has left in his wardrobe over a hundred overcoats, 200 pairs of slippers and boots, and so many dozen sets of pajamas, bathing, lounge, and smoking suits, bath and dressing gowns that Messrs. Dew & Son are offering them in bundles, and not in single lots.

Yet his choice of apparel was governed by much taste. It is impossible to look at the piles of embroidered waistcoats, the primrose hue of the silken dressing gown, the delicate variations of color in the silken underwear without recognizing that here was a man who thought out his own color schemes for his personal decoration, and devoted as much time to every phase of it as Beau Brummel or the Count of Monte Cristo.

Suits by the Dozen. No such collection of clothes has ever been distributed from one wardrobe. It is doubtful if any lady in the land has such a collection of personal belongings. The overcoat range from brown saddle, which is the only color of the collection, to every sort of circumstance made by the best English and French tailors. Not an ordinary suit of clothes cost less than ten guineas, and they are to be sold in pairs. Many of them have not even been worn once. Lord Anglesey ordered his suits by the dozen.

It is in the more private garb that the young Lord's fancy ran riot. The pajamas and silk underwear are elaborate or simple, but all of the costliest material.

One silver head of a Malacca contains a perfect little snapshot camera, and another contains a battery which, at the call of a button, sets a tiny bulb aglow with electric light.

TRAPPED IN SHOP AND MINUS FOOD

In Calculating Theft, Woman Forgets Sunday and a Public Holiday.

PARIS, Sept. 3. Coveting with an intense desire a magnificent costume displayed in a milliner's window in the Chaussee d'Antin, Mile. Leonine Briant, a pretty young woman of Montmartre, at last determined to risk all in the attempt to make it her own.

Sobriety clad in a black dress and an old hat, she mingled with the crowds of customers in the shop last Saturday evening, and just before closing time secreted herself in a cupboard among a number of dresses hanging there.

Then when the last attendant's footsteps had died away and the brilliant lights were lowered she stole out from her hiding place and hastened to search for the costume she long desired. Quickly she exchanged it for her old garment, chose a becoming hat from another department, and, after admiring herself in a neighboring mirror, retired once more to her cupboard, sure of being undisturbed.

When she awoke after a troubled sleep the sun was streaming into the shop, but though she waited many hours all around her remained strangely still. Suddenly she remembered it was Sunday, and she had to resign herself to another night and day in her retreat.

When Monday dawned and grew to midday and no one came to open the shop, Mile. Briant, tired and hungry, and with cramp in all her limbs, recollected with horror that it was a public holiday.

Vainly she searched every corner for a scrap of food, and then, completely exhausted, fell fainting to the floor, where she was found next day. After being fed, she was handed over to the police.

Keeps Son in Wire Cage. BUDAPEST, Sept. 3.—Anton Berg, of Budapest, has original ideas on the subject of parental responsibility. He keeps his only son in a wire cage, in order, he says, "that it may be impossible that the boy shall meet with any accident."

Street Smoking Prohibited. VIENNA, Sept. 3.—Smoking in the streets has been prohibited by the Municipal Council of Vienna. The danger of fire and the want of water to extinguish them is the cause of this order.

DEADLY DYNAMITE IN WOMAN'S PARCEL

Bomb Outrage in Stockholm Wrecks Office, But Intended Victim Escapes.

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 3. A mysterious dynamite outrage has occurred here.

An unknown woman last night called at the offices of the Swedish Separator Company and left a parcel addressed to the director, M. Lundin. On the director's arrival this morning he opened the parcel, and found it to contain a tin box. He lifted the lid, and immediately there was a terrific explosion.

M. Lundin was hurled to the ground, while the whole contents of the office were destroyed. Strangely enough, the director, with the exception of a few bruises caused by the fall, was not otherwise injured.

An examination by the police of the remains of the box showed that it had been completely fitted internal machine filled with dynamite and rifle bullets.

The police are now hunting for the mysterious woman who left the parcel, but have as yet found no trace of her.

WOMAN MAKES BOLD DASH FOR LIBERTY

Outwits Detectives, Leaps Into the Sea and Tries to Swim Ashore.

HAMBURG, Sept. 3. Some remarkable details have come to light regarding a female prisoner's bold leap for liberty from the deck of the steamer Hirondele, while recently on her way to Hamburg.

It is stated that she had forged checks to the amount of $10,000 in Germany, and fled to England, where she was arrested, and, after the necessary extradition formalities, placed upon the Hirondele in charge of two detectives.

She was placed in a special cabin aft and kept under surveillance. One morning, however, about 3 o'clock, she complained of feeling ill, and was allowed to go on deck, accompanied by her two guards.

The vessel was a little over two hundred yards from the German coast, when the woman, pushing her companions aside, sprang into the sea, and, owing to the rapidity with which the ship was steaming, was quickly lost to view.

The Hirondele was at once stopped, and for two hours every effort was made to recover the missing prisoner. Her body was not recovered, but her journey to Hamburg.

The woman's body has not been found, and it is believed that, being a practiced swimmer, her bold ruse has succeeded, with the result that she is now free on land once more. On search of her cabin, sharp dagger was found under her pillow.

THIS HORSE WONDER OF EQUINE WORLD

Understands Human Language and Can Recognize Persons by Their Photographs.

BERLIN, Sept. 3. There is no diminution of interest in the marvelous horse Hans, whose almost incredible feats are performed even in the absence of his teacher, Herr von Osten.

Not only does he read and understand human language, but he can recognize persons from their photographs. He was recently told to remember the phrase "Forest and bridge are occupied by the enemy," and next day took his alphabet and spelt out the words correctly.

Thousands of people, including generals and high officials, crowded to Herr von Osten's house to see the wonderful animal until the police closed the street. The Minister for Education is about to appoint a scientific commission to observe Hans for a few months and issue a report.

While the man was watching his flock the jackal attacked a lamb. He attempted to drive it off, but it attacked him savagely, biting him in the face. He struggled with a jackal, and eventually succeeded in killing it, but sustained frightful injuries in the encounter.

It is supposed that the animal was suffering from rabies, as this is the first recorded instance of one of the species attacking a man in broad daylight.

ROMEO AND JULIET ENACTED IN REAL LIFE

Lover Kills Himself by Sweetheart's Body, She Revives and Shock Kills Her.

ROTTERDAM, Sept. 3. A sensation has been created in the town of Gouda by the remarkable death of two lovers.

A young man named Visser was shortly to have been married to Louisa Pauw, a pretty lacemaker, when it was discovered that his father some years ago died in prison for the murder of the young girl's brother.

The girl thereupon refused to marry Visser, and openly declared her intention to commit suicide. Her parents did not take her threats seriously, but two days ago they discovered her lying senseless on the floor of her bedroom with an empty bottle of chloroform by her side.

Medical aid was summoned, but she was declared to be dead.

Visser appealed to be allowed to see the body before interment, and yesterday permission having been granted, he entered the room where it lay and killed himself with a revolver. At the sound of the shot the supposed corpse began to move, and finally sat up in the coffin.

Most of the spectators fled terror-stricken, but the girl's father lifted her into a chair and began to apply restoratives. Ultimately she regained complete consciousness, but on sighting the blood-stained body of her lover lying on the floor she died of shock.

ONE ANGLER HURLS ANOTHER INTO RIVER

Amusing Incident on Banks of the Seine in the French Capital.

PARIS, Sept. 3. A diverting scene took place this afternoon at the Quai St. Bernard, when an angler, arriving at his favorite spot on the bank of the river, found another fisherman in possession.

Some high words were exchanged, and as the late arrival found his expostulations without avail, he lost his temper, and suddenly pushed his rival into the water.

The unfortunate angler could not swim, and was in imminent danger of drowning when the repentant aggressor jumped in and rescued him.

When they reached dry land the dripping pair made a curious compact, which resulted in the sportsmanlike insistence of the fisherman who had been so unceremoniously treated. He agreed not to have his brother angler arrested on condition that he handed over to him his fishing rod, and promised not to interfere with his sport in future.

As to the outcome of an awkward position so cheaply, the irascible disciple of Izaak Walton handed over his prized rod and departed a wiser and a wetter man.

PRINCE AND BRIDE ON WALKING HONEYMOON

Accompanied by White Mule, They Are Now on a Tour of Italy.

ROME, Sept. 3. The Prince of Waldenburg, a wealthy Viennese nobleman, and his newly wedded bride are spending their honeymoon in an original manner.

Accompanied by a white mule, which carries a small traveling outfit, they are making a walking tour through Italy. A large staff of servants with heavy luggage travels ahead of the bridal pair to arrange for their reception at the best hotels of the towns visited.

WORKMEN DISCOVER BIG NEST OF SERPENTS

PARIS, Sept. 3.—A remarkable find of snakes has been made by a contractor, whose men are engaged in repairing some canal gates near Moulins.

On lifting his coat from the ground a serpent dropped from it, and slid away under a large stone. He called to his men, who raised the stone and discovered no fewer than twenty-three adders, which were immediately killed.

The workmen then began to demolish part of the bank, with the result that in the course of the afternoon they discovered and killed no less than 400 venomous snakes and vipers—the smallest of which was 10 inches long—within a space of twenty yards.

Over 100 snakes' eggs were also found, but, mindful of the fact that the find was entitled to a premium of six cents a snake, the careful workmen watched out the eggs instead of destroying them.

FAIR BRITISH ARISTOCRATS ADEPTS WITH RIFLE ON THE SCOTTISH MOORS

Gaieties of London Set Aside for a Season While High-Born Matron and Maid Bag Game on the Extensive Preserves North of the River Tweed.

EDINBURGH, Sept. 3. THE versatility of the society woman is nowhere more emphasized than in Scotland, where, after a succession of London gaieties, followed by racing at Goodwood and yachting at Cowes, she takes her place on the moors and handles the gun with the savor of the true sportsman.

Of the King's three daughters, Princess Charles of Denmark is the best shot, and as a child failed practice target shooting.

Deer-Stalking Duchesses. The Duchess of Bedford shoots well, and so does the Duchess of Newcastle, who killed many head of big game when traveling with the Duke in the Rocky Mountains. The Marchioness of Breadalbane is famous as a rifle shot and deer-stalker. She fears neither fog, damp, nor cold in pursuit of her favorite occupation.

Lady Sandhurst, Mrs. Algernon Bourke, sister-in-law of Lord Mayo, and Miss Nellie Baldoek, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Baldoek, of Craven Lodge, Melton Mowbray, are all noted deer-stalkers.

Constance Stewart-Richardson has worldwide fame as a sportswoman. In addition to her achievements in Scotland she has killed much big game in Kashmir, Ceylon, and also in Texas. The Countess of Warwick is a crack shot. Violet Lady Beaumont is deadly at partridges, and Mrs. Lancelotti Lowther is a good rabbit shot.

Sporting Honey moons. Lady Delamere ranks high in the list of daring rifle shots, and at her own choice her honeymoon was spent in East Africa in shooting big game. Since then she has made frequent sporting expeditions into the interior, and on her last trip brought down some notable trophies of the African jungle.

Lady Hindlip, a bride of this year, also preferred the dangers and excitement of big game hunting in Africa to the more commonplace honeymoon of Europe. In April she accompanied her husband on country from Mombasa to Uganda, where she brought down many a fine head of game.

Crack Shots. Lady Vivian, an Miss Barbara Fanning, was a good marksman, having been taught by her stepfather, the late Sir Harry McCalmont. Lady Juliet Duff affords another instance of a stepdaughter trained by a sport-loving stepfather. She shoots well, and was the apt pupil of Lord De Grey, who is reckoned one of the best shots in England.

The Hon. Mrs. St. John Brodrick can shoot straight; so can Lady Elena Wickham, sister of the Marquis of Huntly, and the beautiful Lady Beatrice Pole-Carew. Lady Constance Scott, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, is a thorough sportswoman; Lady Wolverton and Lady Helen Stavoriskie can shoot at 200 yards with ease and accuracy. Mrs. Asquith is expert with the rifle. Mrs. Alan Gardner has killed big game all over the world, and Mrs. George Cornwallis West is as good a shot as she is a musician and writer.

FATHER ROBBED AND ASSAILED BY HIS SON

PARIS, Sept. 3.—M. Buisson, a fruiterer living in the Rue de Transval, on returning home from business last night found that his house had been broken into and ransacked and a sum of $10 in gold and some furniture were missing.

M. Buisson learned from his neighbors that his son, a ne'er-do-well, accompanied by four men, had come to the house in the afternoon with a hand-cart and cleared out the furniture.

The old man started off at once to look for his son, whom he found drinking in a wine shop with his companions. On being threatened with arrest by his father, young Buisson seized his blackthorn stick and dealt him a terrific blow on the head, splitting it open.

He was removed in a dying condition to the hospital, and the son was arrested.

Young Neyrick set out at full speed on his motor-cycle, and when half way to Bruges collided violently with his father, while turning a sharp corner. Neyrick, senior, was killed on the spot, and his son received mortal injuries.

YOUNGEST OF INDIA'S RULING PRINCES NOW ON A BRIEF VISIT TO ENGLAND

Maharajah of Mysore Rules Over Territory About Size of Scotland and With Scotland's Population.

LONDON, Sept. 3. THE Maharajah of Mysore has arrived in England on a brief visit.

The Maharajah is the youngest of the ruling Princes of India of the first rank, and in the three years that have elapsed since his installation in power by Lord Curzon he has done much to justify the predictions of those who declared in his youth that he would make a wise ruler. Mysore is a very interesting state with a history closely interwoven with England in India during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, and its Prince ranks on a par with the Nizam and the Gaikwar as the foremost of English feudatories.

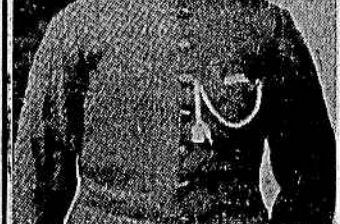

He succeeded his father, to whom England had restored Mysore in 1801, on that Prince's sudden and much-lamented death in December, 1894, for in those thirteen years the late Maharajah had won the title of "the model Prince of India." A regency of seven years intervened, and now the Maharajah is following closely in his father's footsteps. Having first gained a reputation in many pursuits he has lately turned his attention to the more responsible side of practical administration.

Yet it may be recorded that it was an gay and gallant chieftain heading his Imperial Service Lancers in a march past or leading his own palace team in a tournament for a polo championship. Aided by experienced officials of whom his Crime Minister, Sir Krishna Murti, is acknowledged to be the leading Indian-born statesman of the day—he is now intent on developing the resources of Mysore and of raising its people to the very first place in India as a prosperous community.

It was with that object that he opened the Industrial and Technical Exhibition at Madras in January last, one of the most remarkable proofs of the awakening of India that has recently been afforded, and immediately on his return from the ceremony he proceeded to establish and endow a technical school for his own subjects at Nasirabad.

Another matter which has been far advanced toward a satisfactory conclusion in Mysore is female education, especially difficult in India where women are kept in strict seclusion. It may not be uninteresting to point out that Mysore is very nearly the size of Scotland, and that it possesses about the same number of people. Its recent progress under its own native administration affords the strongest reason for taking an optimistic view of the future of India.
